READER'S GUIDE

About This Expanded Edition

This edition develops Ephesians 6 as a complete discipleship study. Its purpose is not to create fear or fascination with darkness, but to deepen confidence in Jesus Christ, strengthen biblical discernment, and form faithful habits of truth, holiness, peace, faith, hope, Scripture, prayer, and Christian community.

How the book is organized

- Twelve chapters follow Paul's teaching from strength in the Lord through persevering prayer and everyday faithfulness.
- Each chapter has three teaching movements, a Scripture map, a commentary lens, a discernment workshop, an extended case study, reflection and S.O.A.P. pages, a key takeaway, a group guide, and a closing prayer.
- A thirty-day field guide, with a distinct reading and response for every day, helps readers turn insight into steady practice.
- The leader guide offers a flexible plan for churches, small groups, families, and online ministry communities.
- Ruled journaling pages are provided throughout. This is a workbook as much as a book; much of it is meant to be written in.

Scripture and commentary note

Short direct quotations in the teaching sections are from the King James Version, which is in the public domain. Scripture references link to Bible Gateway, where the passage can be read in the translation you prefer; readers who find the older English difficult are encouraged to read a modern translation alongside. Paraphrases are identified by their form. Commentary insights summarize Matthew Henry, John Calvin, and David Guzik; they serve the study of Scripture and do not replace it.

A pastoral safeguard

Spiritual warfare must never be used to shame people, avoid medical or professional help, excuse abuse, or treat human beings as enemies. Wise Christian care can include prayer, Scripture, pastoral support, medical care, counseling, safety planning, and lawful intervention.

THE STORY BEFORE THE ARMOR

Introduction: Equipped for Faithfulness I

Ephesians does not begin with a battlefield. It begins with praise for the God who blesses his people in Christ. Paul announces adoption, redemption, forgiveness, the promised Holy Spirit, and the immeasurable greatness of divine power. Only after unfolding grace does he describe the life that grace creates. The order is essential: identity in Christ precedes the call to stand.

The church addressed by Ephesians is not a collection of isolated spiritual heroes. Jews and Gentiles are reconciled through the cross and built together into a dwelling place for God by the Spirit. Spiritual warfare therefore has a communal shape. Believers tell truth to one another, forgive one another, sing together, pray for all the saints, and receive encouragement through faithful messengers.

The controlling command

Ephesians 6 repeatedly calls believers to stand. Standing is not passivity. It is sustained allegiance to Jesus under pressure. Sometimes it looks like refusing a dishonest shortcut. Sometimes it is confessing sin rather than protecting an image. Sometimes it is continuing to pray when the answer is delayed. The goal is faithfulness, not spectacle.

KEEPING CHRIST AT THE CENTER

Introduction: Equipped for Faithfulness II

A real enemy, a greater Lord

Paul names the schemes of the devil and spiritual forces of evil. Christian teaching should neither deny that conflict nor make it the center of the faith. The enemy is dangerous, but he is not equal to God. Ephesians has already placed Christ above every rule, authority, power, and dominion. The armor passage must be read beneath that announcement of Christ's exaltation.

Discernment without superstition

Scripture speaks about the devil, the world, and disordered human desire. Not every hardship has an identifiable demonic cause, and believers are not instructed to map the unseen realm. Paul's response is concrete: depend on the Lord, put on the whole armor, stand, use the Word faithfully, and pray. Sober obedience is safer than confident speculation.

People are not the enemy

The words "not against flesh and blood" place a boundary around Christian conduct. Opposition never authorizes hatred, threats, manipulation, or violence against people. Truth may confront wrongdoing. Love may establish boundaries and pursue justice. Yet every human being remains a neighbor made in God's image and in need of grace.

How to use this workbook

Read the biblical passage before the teaching, not after it. Write in the ruled spaces; the questions are not rhetorical. If you are studying in a group, work through one chapter each week and give the case study its own conversation. If you are studying alone, pair each chapter with two or three days of the field guide in Appendix A.

A prayer before beginning

Lord Jesus, keep my attention fixed on you. Give me courage without pride, alertness without fear, conviction without cruelty, and confidence without presumption. Form your truth in my mind and your love in my conduct. Amen.

1. Strong in the Lord

Ephesians 6:10-11

Spiritual strength is received through union with Christ and expressed through dependent obedience.

“Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might.” — Ephesians 6:10, KJV

Chapter aim

This chapter will help you locate the source of Christian strength outside yourself, recognize how self-reliance imitates courage, and take one dependent step of obedience in a responsibility that feels too large.

Opening questions

1. What words, commands, promises, or reasons stand out in this passage?
2. What does the text reveal about God before it tells you what to do?
3. Where do you feel resistance, confusion, comfort, or conviction?

CHAPTER 1 | EPHESIANS 6 EXPANDED STUDY

Deeper Teaching 1

Strong in the Lord

The source of strength

Paul's first instruction is essential to everything that follows. He does not begin with the believer's willpower, knowledge of the enemy, or record of success. He begins with the Lord. Christian strength grows from dependence on the living Christ. This dependence is active. A branch does not produce fruit independently of the vine, yet a living branch does bear fruit. In John 15, Jesus connects abiding in him with a fruitful life. Likewise, receiving strength from Christ moves us toward obedience, prayer, repentance, and patient endurance. Dependence does not excuse passivity; it makes faithful action possible. Ephesians has already described God's power in connection with the resurrection and exaltation of Jesus. The One who strengthens his people is the risen Lord, above every power and authority. We should read the armor passage with that earlier announcement in mind. The enemy is dangerous, but he is never Christ's equal.

Pause and respond

Where do you currently look for strength first?

CHAPTER 1 | EPHESIANS 6 EXPANDED STUDY

Deeper Teaching 2

Strong in the Lord

Strength in weakness

Paul's experience in 2 Corinthians 12 challenges our assumptions. He asked for a painful affliction to be removed, but the Lord answered with sufficient grace. Weakness did not make Paul useless. It became a setting in which Christ's power was displayed. We must not turn that passage into a promise that every hardship will disappear when faith becomes strong enough. Ephesians itself describes Paul as an ambassador in chains. Faithful service and difficult circumstances can exist together. God's strength may appear in the courage to endure, the humility to receive help, or the grace to obey when relief has not arrived.

Pause and respond

Name a hardship that has not gone away. What has God supplied inside it?

CHAPTER 1 | EPHESIANS 6 EXPANDED STUDY

Deeper Teaching 3

Strong in the Lord

Practice: trade self-reliance for prayerful obedience

Imagine receiving a message that unfairly questions your motives. Your first impulse is to defend yourself immediately. Dependence begins when you pause before acting, bring the hurt to God, and ask for wisdom. It continues when you choose an honest and measured response. Prayer does not replace the response; it shapes it. Name one responsibility that currently feels larger than your ability. Ask God for the strength to take the next faithful step. That step may include seeking counsel, apologizing, preparing carefully, or simply continuing a duty you would rather abandon.

Pause and respond

What is the next faithful step in a task that feels too large?

Key takeaway

God does not require self-sufficiency; he calls us to dependent obedience.

CHAPTER 1 | EPHESIANS 6 EXPANDED STUDY

Christian Commentary Lens

Strong in the Lord

A historic voice

David Guzik stresses that strength in the Lord and the armor of God must remain together. The equipment is not a charm; believers rely on God's might and then step into obedient action.

Read commentaries wisely

Christian commentators can clarify language, historical setting, theological connections, and pastoral application. They are valuable teachers, but they are not inspired Scripture. Compare their claims with the biblical text, notice where their traditions differ, and resist treating one interpreter as the final authority.

Questions for evaluation

1. Which part of this insight is clearly grounded in the words and context of the passage?
2. Does the interpretation fit the message of Ephesians as a whole?
3. What pastoral strength does it offer?
4. What qualification should be kept beside it?

CHAPTER 1 | EPHESIANS 6 EXPANDED STUDY

Discernment Workshop

Strong in the Lord

The distortion to recognize

Self-reliance can look courageous while quietly disconnecting action from prayer, Scripture, and Christian community.

Test the message

1. What is being claimed about God?
2. What does the claim ask me to fear, love, trust, or obey?
3. Is Scripture being read in context or used as decoration?
4. Does the application produce truth, holiness, peace, faith, hope, love, and humility?
5. Who benefits if I accept the claim without examination?

A faithful reframe

Spiritual strength is received through union with Christ and expressed through dependent obedience.

My discernment notes

CHAPTER 1 | EPHESIANS 6 EXPANDED STUDY

Case Study

Strong in the Lord

Daniel has spent six weeks preparing a teaching series for his church's young adults. Two days before the first session, a longtime member sends him a message questioning whether he is doing this for the congregation or for himself.

Daniel reads it four times. By evening he has drafted a reply listing every hour he has given the church without being asked. He does not send it, but he does not delete it either. Instead he stays up until two in the morning rewriting material that was already finished, and he tells his wife the message did not bother him.

Two things are happening at once. A hurtful accusation has landed, and Daniel is answering it with proof of his own adequacy. The defensive draft and the sleepless rewriting come from the same place: if he can demonstrate enough competence, the accusation will not be able to touch him. Prayer has dropped out entirely, and so has anyone who might tell him the truth.

Read the situation twice before turning the page. Notice where the reasoning turns, not only where the conduct does.

2. What is the unspoken belief underneath the late-night rewriting?
3. Where does Ephesians 6:10 locate the strength Daniel is trying to manufacture?
4. What would it cost him to tell his wife the truth about how he felt?
5. What would a measured reply look like, written after prayer rather than instead of it?

CHAPTER 2 | EPHESIANS 6 EXPANDED STUDY

Deeper Teaching 1

Know the Conflict, Keep Your Eyes on Christ

Schemes rather than spectacle

Paul describes an intelligent and hostile spiritual opposition. The devil uses schemes: deception, temptation, and strategies that draw people away from faithful allegiance to God. Genesis 3 shows temptation working through suspicion of God’s goodness and distortion of his command. The issue is not merely whether a forbidden action looks attractive. It is whether God can be trusted. This pattern still has recognizable forms. A temptation may suggest that obedience will leave us deprived, that secrecy will keep sin harmless, or that a painful experience proves God has abandoned us. Scripture helps expose the false promise beneath the immediate desire. At the same time, James teaches that our own desires can entice us into sin. We should not blame Satan in a way that removes personal responsibility. Scripture also speaks of the pressures of the world and the desires of the flesh. Discernment means taking these teachings together rather than attributing every inconvenience, disagreement, or troubling thought to direct demonic activity.

Pause and respond

Which false promise has been most persuasive to you lately?

CHAPTER 2 | EPHESIANS 6 EXPANDED STUDY

Deeper Teaching 2

Know the Conflict, Keep Your Eyes on Christ

People are not our ultimate enemy

The words “not against flesh and blood” reshape the way we respond to conflict. A difficult relative, an unbelieving neighbor, or a person who opposes Christianity remains someone to whom we owe truthfulness and love. Spiritual warfare never authorizes hatred, threats, or violence against people. This does not make harmful conduct acceptable. Love can tell the truth, establish boundaries, and pursue justice. But even when we confront wrongdoing, we must refuse the desire to dehumanize the wrongdoer. Jesus commands love for enemies, and Paul tells believers to overcome evil with good. The spiritual realities named in Ephesians 6 are serious, but Paul does not provide a detailed hierarchy for us to map. His instruction is practical: receive the armor and stand. Curiosity about unseen powers must remain subordinate to what Scripture actually tells us to do.

Pause and respond

Name someone you have begun to treat as the problem itself.

CHAPTER 2 | EPHESIANS 6 EXPANDED STUDY

Deeper Teaching 3

Know the Conflict, Keep Your Eyes on Christ

Practice: resist through submission

James 4 places resistance to the devil alongside submission to God, repentance, and humility. Resistance is not a display of personal spiritual importance. It includes turning from dishonesty, refusing revenge, and drawing near to God. Consider a conflict in which resentment has become habitual. Identify the actual wrongdoing without exaggeration. Then identify your own temptation: gossip, contempt, retaliation, or refusal to listen. Bring both matters to the Lord. Ask for courage to address the first and grace to repent of the second.

Pause and respond

What does submitting to God look like in your present conflict?

Key takeaway

Recognize spiritual opposition without surrendering responsibility, love, or confidence in Christ.

Case Study

Know the Conflict, Keep Your Eyes on Christ

Marcus shares an office with a coworker who has undermined him in two meetings and takes credit for work Marcus completed. Marcus is a Christian; his coworker is not.

At first Marcus prayed for patience. Over several months the prayers changed. He began asking God to expose the man, then to remove him, then simply to make things difficult for him. He describes this to a friend as spiritual warfare. He has also started collecting evidence, forwarding emails to himself, and mentioning the situation to colleagues in ways he would not want repeated.

The wrongdoing is real. Marcus is not imagining it, and Christian teaching does not require him to pretend otherwise. But somewhere in those months the coworker stopped being a person who wrongs him and became the enemy itself. Ephesians 6:12 does not deny that Marcus is in a conflict. It denies that this man is what he is fighting.

Deeper Teaching 1

The Whole Armor of God

God provides what he commands

The phrase “armor of God” directs our attention to divine provision. Paul is describing resources that belong to the life God gives his people: truth, righteousness, the gospel of peace, faith, salvation, and the Word of God. These are received and practiced in dependence on him. The imagery has deep biblical roots. Isaiah 59 pictures the Lord putting on righteousness like a breastplate and salvation like a helmet as he acts against injustice. Isaiah 11 describes the righteous ruler from Jesse’s line with righteousness and faithfulness around his waist. Isaiah 52 celebrates the messenger who announces peace and good news. Paul’s readers are being drawn into a story in which God saves, rules, and equips his people. Those connections help us avoid reducing the passage to an imaginative lesson about ancient military equipment. The equipment supplies the picture; God’s redemptive work supplies its meaning. Historical details can be useful, but speculative claims about every strap or metal plate can distract from Paul’s clear emphasis.

Pause and respond

Which Isaiah image most changes how you read Ephesians 6?

CHAPTER 3 | EPHESIANS 6 EXPANDED STUDY

Deeper Teaching 2

The Whole Armor of God

Why the whole armor matters

We are tempted to cultivate the parts of Christian life that suit our personality. One person prizes knowledge but neglects prayer. Another speaks confidently about faith but resists correction. Someone else values kindness while avoiding difficult truth. Paul's picture challenges such selective discipleship. Truth and love belong together. Assurance and repentance belong together. Peace and courage belong together. The armor is not a menu from which we choose favorite traits. God forms a whole life of faithful dependence.

Pause and respond

Which part of Christian obedience do you quietly leave off?

CHAPTER 3 | EPHESIANS 6 EXPANDED STUDY

Deeper Teaching 3

The Whole Armor of God

What it means to stand

Standing does not mean remaining motionless. In this passage it means holding firmly to the Lord and resisting the pressure to abandon faithfulness. Sometimes standing looks like refusing a dishonest shortcut. Sometimes it means confessing sin instead of protecting an image. Sometimes it is continuing to pray through weariness. Nor does standing mean we never stumble. The same gospel that equips believers also calls them back through confession and forgiveness. A fall should lead us toward the Savior, not toward the conclusion that repentance is pointless. Practice: Review the six pieces of armor. Choose one area where your habits need attention. Set a specific response for this week, such as reading Scripture before checking social media, making an overdue apology, or asking a mature believer to pray with you.

Pause and respond

What would standing look like in an ordinary day this week?

Key takeaway

God equips the whole person for a whole life of faithfulness.

Case Study

The Whole Armor of God

Ruth has taught an adult Bible class for eleven years. Her lessons are carefully researched, her doctrine is sound, and people who want precision seek her out.

She has also not asked anyone's forgiveness in living memory. She corrects quickly and publicly. When a younger teacher made an interpretive mistake last spring, Ruth addressed it in front of the class in a way that ended his willingness to teach again. Asked to pray at a church gathering, she declines; she says that is not her gift. Her husband has stopped raising difficult subjects with her because the conversation always becomes a matter of who is correct.

Nothing Ruth teaches is false. That is what makes this hard to see. She has cultivated one part of Christian obedience with real discipline and left several others entirely undeveloped, and the exposed places are exactly where she does the most damage.

Read the situation twice before turning the page. Notice where the reasoning turns, not only where the conduct does.

Deeper Teaching 1

The Belt of Truth

Truth received and truth practiced

Truth in Ephesians is inseparable from Jesus and the gospel. Paul speaks of the word of truth, the gospel of salvation, and later says that truth is in Jesus. Christian truthfulness therefore begins with receiving God's revelation rather than inventing a reality that flatters our desires. It also reshapes conduct. Ephesians 4 tells believers to put away lying and speak truth to one another. We cannot defend biblical truth publicly while cultivating deception privately. The message we confess should form the life we live.

Pause and respond

Where does your public confession differ from your private conduct?

CHAPTER 4 | EPHESIANS 6 EXPANDED STUDY

Deeper Teaching 2

The Belt of Truth

Lies often contain something true

A deceptive thought may begin with an accurate observation: “You sinned.” It then adds a false conclusion: “Therefore, returning to God is useless.” Another thought may begin, “This relationship is difficult,” and conclude, “Therefore, cruelty is justified.” Discernment requires examining the conclusion, not merely reacting to the emotional force of the thought. The gospel allows us to be honest about sin without accepting hopelessness. First John 1:8–9 rejects denial and invites confession. Romans 8:1 announces freedom from condemnation for those in Christ. These truths work together. We neither excuse sin nor treat it as stronger than the mercy of Jesus. Truth also requires context. An isolated verse can be used to support an idea the passage does not teach. Read the surrounding paragraph, identify the speaker and audience, and ask how the statement fits the message of the biblical book.

Pause and respond

Write one lie you repeatedly believe, and the passage that answers it.

CHAPTER 4 | EPHESIANS 6 EXPANDED STUDY

*The Belt of TruthPractice: an honest inventory

Think of one situation in which you are tempted to manage appearances. Perhaps you are minimizing a failure, exaggerating a success, or withholding information someone reasonably needs. Ask what you are afraid truthful speech will cost. Then ask what continued deception will do to trust. Speaking truth does not require speaking every thought or exposing another person's private matters. Ephesians 4:15 joins truth with love. The aim is faithful, appropriate honesty that serves the other person's good. Write down a recurring lie you believe about God, yourself, or other people. Beside it, record a passage that addresses it in context. Then choose a practical act of truthfulness. Truth becomes visible when a corrected belief produces a changed response.

Pause and respond

What truthful sentence have you been avoiding, and to whom?

Key takeaway

The belt of truth joins confidence in God's Word with integrity in everyday life.

Case Study

The Belt of Truth

Alicia is asked to record a short testimony for her church's website. Her story is real: a difficult stretch, a return to faith, a marriage that survived.

In the recording she says the change happened 'overnight.' It did not. It took about three years, involved a counselor she does not mention, and included a relapse she has never told anyone about. She also compresses two people into one and moves a conversation to a more dramatic location. Nothing she says is technically false. The overall impression is not true.

Alicia's reasoning is that a cleaner story will help more people. Underneath that is a quieter assumption: that God's actual work in her life was not impressive enough to be useful, and that the gap needs closing by her. The belt of truth is not only about avoiding lies. It is about whether she believes the real account is worth telling.

CHAPTER 5 | EPHESIANS 6 EXPANDED STUDY

Deeper Teaching 1

The Breastplate of Righteousness

Accepted by grace, called to holiness

A study of righteousness must hold together two truths. We cannot establish our acceptance with God through moral achievement. Salvation is his gift in Christ. Yet that gift produces a new direction of life. The people saved by grace are created for good works. Christians have differed over whether the breastplate primarily emphasizes the righteousness received through Christ or the righteous conduct that flows from new life. The wider biblical witness teaches both, though they should not be confused. Our obedience does not replace Christ as the basis of acceptance; our acceptance does not make obedience unnecessary.

Ephesians 4 supports a strong ethical application: the new self is created in righteousness and true holiness. Wearing the breastplate therefore involves bringing our conduct under the lordship of Jesus, with confidence that his grace precedes and enables that response.

Pause and respond

Are you trying to earn acceptance, or using grace to excuse disobedience?

CHAPTER 5 | EPHESIANS 6 EXPANDED STUDY

Deeper Teaching 2

The Breastplate of Righteousness

Compromise weakens integrity

Sin makes promises it cannot keep. A secret habit promises relief but deepens concealment. A dishonest business practice promises security but erodes integrity. Harbored resentment promises protection but trains the heart in hostility. We should resist these patterns without imagining that a flawless record makes us invulnerable. The protection is not self-righteousness. It is the life of repentance and obedience that grows from belonging to Christ. When we fail, confession is part of returning to that life. First John does not tell believers to pretend they have no sin. It calls them into the light. A person walking in the light can acknowledge wrongdoing because forgiveness is found in God's faithfulness, not in successful image management.

Pause and respond

Which promise has a compromise made you that it cannot keep?

CHAPTER 5 | EPHESIANS 6 EXPANDED STUDY

Deeper Teaching 3

The Breastplate of Righteousness

Practice: make repentance concrete

Suppose you have been using harsh words at home while speaking graciously in public. General regret may leave the pattern untouched. Concrete repentance names what happened, acknowledges the harm, asks forgiveness without excuses, and changes the conditions that allow the behavior to continue. An apology may need to be followed by restitution, accountability, or a new habit of stepping away before responding in anger. These actions do not purchase forgiveness. They express the seriousness of turning toward God.

Pause and respond

Where is your repentance still general rather than specific?

Key takeaway

Righteous living grows from grace and expresses itself in sincere repentance and obedience.

Case Study

The Breastplate of Righteousness

For most of a year Tom has spoken sharply to his wife and children in the evenings. He is warm and patient with everyone else. Each time it happens he feels genuinely awful, apologizes in general terms, and resolves to do better.

His apologies sound like this: 'I've been under a lot of pressure. I'm sorry if I've been short with everyone.' His daughter has stopped coming downstairs after dinner. Tom has noticed and has not asked why. He has prayed about his temper many times and has never named a single specific occasion in those prayers.

Tom's remorse is real, and it has changed nothing for a year. Regret that stays general leaves the pattern completely intact. Concrete repentance would mean naming what he actually said and to whom, acknowledging the harm without explaining the pressure that produced it, asking forgiveness without the word 'if,' and changing the conditions — the hour, the workload, the drive home — that keep producing the same evening.

CHAPTER 6 | EPHESIANS 6 EXPANDED STUDY

Deeper Teaching 1

Feet Ready with the Gospel of Peace

Peace begins with reconciliation

The gospel announces what God has done through Jesus to reconcile sinners to himself. Romans 5:1 connects justification by faith with peace with God. This peace is more than a calm feeling. It concerns a changed relationship made possible through Christ. Ephesians also describes peace between people who were once divided. Christ brings Jew and Gentile together in one body through the cross. The peace of the gospel is therefore personal and communal. It forms a people who share access to the Father by one Spirit. In a passage about conflict, Paul equips believers with peace. That combination should correct our tone. We resist evil while carrying a message of reconciliation. A combative personality is not proof of spiritual maturity.

Where are you trying to establish worth through winning?

CHAPTER 6 | EPHESIANS 6 EXPANDED STUDY

Deeper Teaching 2

Feet Ready with the Gospel of Peace

Readiness and stability

The wording about preparation or readiness has been understood with different emphases: a firm footing supplied by the gospel, readiness to move in obedience, and readiness to share the good news. We should avoid pretending the verse settles every detail of the image. Together with the surrounding Scriptures, it clearly calls us to be equipped by the gospel of peace. A person grounded in reconciliation with God can approach difficult situations without needing to prove personal worth through victory in every argument. That freedom allows us to listen carefully, speak honestly, and remain patient when another person disagrees.

Pause and respond

What footing does peace with God give you in a difficult conversation?

CHAPTER 6 | EPHESIANS 6 EXPANDED STUDY

Deeper Teaching 3

Feet Ready with the Gospel of Peace

Practice: carry peace into a real conversation

Think of someone with whom spiritual conversations have become tense. Before speaking again, ask whether your goal has become winning rather than helping. Prepare to explain the gospel simply: humanity's sin, Christ's death and resurrection, and God's call to repentance and faith. Then listen. Ask what the person actually believes and why. Do not answer an imagined objection while ignoring the real question. Colossians 4 calls for gracious speech suited to the person before us. Peacemaking does not mean concealing disagreement or declaring every belief equally true. It means approaching people as those who need grace, just as we do. The message of the cross gives us both conviction and humility.

Pause and respond

Whose actual question have you been answering past?

Key takeaway

The gospel gives believers firm ground and sends them toward others with good news.

At a family dinner, Priya's brother-in-law says he cannot believe in a God who would allow his mother's illness. He says it plainly, without hostility.

Priya answers immediately. She has read about this and moves through the material well: free will, a fallen creation, the cross as God's entry into suffering. Her arguments are sound. Twenty minutes later he has stopped responding and the table has gone quiet.

What Priya answered was the question as she had studied it. What her brother-in-law asked was about his mother. He was not presenting a problem in philosophy of religion; he was telling his family something about the last two years of his life. Priya's feet were ready — she was prepared to speak — but readiness in Ephesians 6:15 belongs to the gospel of peace, and peace here would have begun with a question rather than an answer.

Faith has an object

Faith is not confidence that our preferred outcome must happen. It is trust in God as he has made himself known. Its strength rests ultimately in his faithfulness, not in the intensity of our feelings. That distinction matters when circumstances hurt. A believer may trust God deeply while grieving, trembling, or asking hard questions. Psalm 56 brings fear directly into the act of trusting. The presence of fear does not make trust impossible; it becomes the setting in which trust is exercised. The father in Mark 9 brings his struggling faith to Jesus. He does not wait until he has resolved every inward conflict. His appeal directs us toward the same posture: honest dependence on the One who can help.

What have you been treating as the object of faith?

The Shield of Faith

Answer the accusation with God's promise

Paul describes the evil one's attacks as fiery darts. The image suggests assaults intended to wound and spread destruction. In practical application, we may think of temptations toward distrust, accusation, despair, or arrogant independence. These are examples of how the image can illuminate experience, not a claim that every distressing thought has a directly identifiable spiritual source. Faith answers by returning to what God has said. When accusation insists that confession is pointless, faith remembers God's promise of forgiveness. When suffering is interpreted as proof of abandonment, faith looks to the crucified and risen Christ. When temptation promises that disobedience will secure happiness, faith entrusts the future to the Lord. This response is more than reciting a phrase. We read the promise in context, bring our situation to God, and act in line with his Word. Faith grows as trust becomes obedience.

Which accusation needs answering with a promise read in context?

Practice: bring one fear into the light

Choose one fear you have been carrying alone. Describe it honestly in prayer. Find a passage that reveals God's character without promising an outcome the text does not guarantee. Share the concern with a trustworthy believer who can pray with you. Then identify one action that expresses trust. It may be refusing a dishonest solution, asking for help, or continuing a responsibility while the outcome remains uncertain. The aim is not to manufacture a fearless feeling. It is to entrust yourself to the faithful Lord.

Pause and respond

What fear have you carried alone, and who could carry it with you?

Key takeaway

Faith receives God's truth and entrusts the outcome to his wisdom and care.

Case Study

The Shield of Faith

Grace had a biopsy nine days ago. The result was supposed to come Tuesday and has not.

Two friends from church have told her confidently that God has already healed her and that she should not speak negatively. A third has told her that anxiety indicates weak faith. Grace has stopped mentioning the wait to anyone. She lies awake rehearsing outcomes and has begun avoiding prayer, because when she prays she feels she is supposed to produce a certainty she does not have.

Her friends have handed her a shield she cannot lift. Faith in Ephesians 6 is not the achievement of confident feeling; it is trust in the God who has revealed himself, and Psalm 56 places fear inside the act of trusting rather than outside it. Grace does not need to resolve her fear before she prays. The fear is the thing she brings.

Deeper Teaching 1

*The Helmet of SalvationSalvation has a future

The gospel tells us what Christ has accomplished and where his saving work is taking his people. Believers have been redeemed, are being formed in holiness, and await the completion of God's promised restoration. First Peter calls this a living hope grounded in the resurrection of Jesus. First Thessalonians 5 describes the helmet as the hope of salvation. Read alongside Ephesians, this points us toward confidence in God's promised future. The present struggle is real, but it is not the final chapter of the Christian's story. Hope changes how we interpret the present. Suffering cannot prove that Christ has failed. Delay cannot cancel God's promise. Our inability to see the whole path does not mean the destination has disappeared.

What most controls your sense of spiritual security?

CHAPTER 8 | EPHESIANS 6 EXPANDED STUDY

Deeper Teaching 2

The Helmet of Salvation

Assurance belongs to Christ

Assurance becomes unstable when we build it entirely on our latest spiritual experience. A good day produces confidence; a difficult day seems to erase it. Scripture directs us toward the objective work of Jesus and the trustworthy promises of God. Romans 8 grounds freedom from condemnation in Christ and celebrates God's preserving love. Ephesians 1 connects the Spirit's sealing with the promised inheritance. These passages invite believers to look beyond fluctuating moods to the Savior who died and rose again. That confidence does not make self-examination unnecessary. A person deliberately protecting sin should respond with repentance rather than empty reassurance. But repentance itself points us back to mercy. The purpose of biblical examination is faithful return to God, not endless preoccupation with ourselves.

Pause and respond

Where does assurance rise and fall with your latest day?

CHAPTER 8 | EPHESIANS 6 EXPANDED STUDY

The Helmet of Salvation

Practice: remember your larger story

When you feel reduced to your failure, disappointment, or present limitation, write a short statement of gospel hope: God has acted in Christ; I am called to repent and trust him; his people await resurrection life; my present circumstances are not ultimate. Use the words carefully. Do not claim that every painful consequence will disappear now. Hope can coexist with ongoing responsibility, loss, and rebuilding. The helmet does not remove the difficult day; it equips us to face that day in light of God's future. Spend time reading Romans 8:31–39 slowly. Notice how Paul argues from God's action in Christ to confidence in his love. Let the passage shape your understanding before turning it into a personal prayer.

Pause and respond

How does resurrection hope change today specifically?

Key takeaway

The hope of salvation anchors the believer in Christ's work and God's promised future.

Case Study

The Helmet of Salvation

Nathan led a small group for four years. Eight months ago an affair came to light. He confessed, stepped down, and his marriage is in slow, painful repair.

He has not been back to church. When people from the group reach out he answers briefly. He told one of them that he does not think returning to God is the point anymore — not because he doubts God exists, but because he believes he has used up whatever standing he had. He can quote the verses about forgiveness. He does not think they apply to someone who knew better.

Nathan's conclusion contains a true premise. He did know better, and there are consequences he will carry for years. The false step is the inference. The armor passage is written to people who need God's strength, not to people who have proved they deserve it, and the helmet of salvation rests on Christ's finished work rather than on Nathan's record.

The Sword of the Spirit

The Word belongs to the Spirit

Paul identifies the sword directly. It is the Word of God. We do not need to invent a hidden weapon or discover a special phrase. God has spoken, and his people are called to hear, believe, and obey. The Spirit does not lead believers away from the truth he has given. Scripture teaches, corrects, and trains God's people for faithful living. Its work reaches beneath appearances, exposing motives we may prefer to conceal. That means the sword first challenges our own heart. We misuse Scripture when we wield it against others while refusing its correction ourselves. The disciple approaches the Word ready to be taught, not merely armed with arguments.

The Sword of the Spirit

Jesus and the temptation in the wilderness

Matthew 4 provides a clear model of faithful use of Scripture under temptation. Jesus answers the tempter from Deuteronomy. He refuses to treat hunger as permission to abandon obedience, refuses to test the Father, and refuses worship directed anywhere but God. The tempter also cites Scripture. This is a crucial warning: the presence of biblical words does not guarantee a faithful interpretation. Jesus' answer shows that one passage must not be used to justify disobedience to the wider teaching of God's Word. Read the Deuteronomy passages in context. They concern Israel's dependence, worship, and covenant faithfulness. Jesus answers as the faithful Son who trusts the Father. His example is richer than a technique for winning verbal contests.

Practice: study before you quote

Choose a temptation that regularly troubles you. Find a relevant passage and read the surrounding section. Ask what the passage teaches about God, what response it calls for, and how it connects with the gospel. Next, summarize the teaching in your own words. Memorize a short portion accurately. Finally, decide how obedience will look when the temptation returns. If the issue is anger, the response may involve a pause, a gentle answer, and a later conversation. If the issue is dishonesty, it may involve correcting a misleading statement. Memorization helps us remember what God has said, but it is not a magical barrier. A verse faithfully understood and obeyed serves its purpose better than a long list recited without attention to meaning.

Eric is uneasy but cannot immediately say why, and the accuracy of the quotation makes him doubt his own reaction. He shares it.

In Matthew 4 the tempter also quotes Scripture accurately. Jesus does not answer by disputing the words; he answers from the wider teaching the quotation has been cut away from. That is the test Eric needed. Who is speaking in the passage, to whom, and about what? Does the conclusion fit the argument of the book it comes from? Does the application produce the love, humility, and truthfulness the rest of Scripture requires? A verse used to license contempt has been turned against its own author.

Pray at All Times

Prayer accompanies the whole life

After describing the armor, Paul calls believers to prayer. He does not attach a seventh piece of equipment to it in this passage. Prayer accompanies the whole struggle as an expression of dependence on God. The repeated breadth of the instruction matters: all occasions, varied prayer, perseverance, and all the saints. Prayer is not reserved for moments when circumstances become unbearable. Thanksgiving in ordinary life, confession after failure, petitions for wisdom, and intercession for others all belong here. Praying in the Spirit means relying on the Spirit's help and seeking God in keeping with his will. Christians differ over how this phrase relates to particular spiritual gifts, but the passage plainly calls the whole church to persistent, Spirit-dependent prayer. Romans 8 assures us of the Spirit's help in weakness.

CHAPTER 10 | EPHESIANS 6 EXPANDED STUDY

Deeper Teaching 2

Pray at All Times

Watchfulness and perseverance

Watchfulness keeps prayer connected with real needs. We notice a believer growing discouraged, a relationship becoming strained, or a temptation gaining influence. We bring these concerns to God before indifference or panic takes control. Perseverance means returning when the answer is delayed. It does not mean pressuring God with a flawless formula. Jesus' teaching in Luke 18 encourages prayer rooted in confidence in God's justice. The contrast between the unjust judge and our faithful God strengthens the invitation to keep praying.

Pause and respond

Whose need have you noticed and not brought to God?

CHAPTER 10 | EPHESIANS 6 EXPANDED STUDY

Deeper Teaching 3

Pray at All Times

Paul's surprising request

Paul asks for prayer that he will speak the gospel boldly. His chains have not erased his calling. This does not forbid praying for relief; it broadens our concerns beyond relief alone. We may ask both for deliverance from hardship and for faithfulness within it. This is especially relevant to ministry. Public teaching, online content, and personal evangelism require more than visibility. They require clarity, courage, humility, and dependence on God. Paul's example gives every believer a reason to pray for those who communicate the gospel. Practice: Pray today for one personal need, one struggling believer, one person who does not know Christ, and one gospel worker. Include thanksgiving. Ask not only for changed circumstances but also for wisdom and faithful action within them.

Pause and respond

What would change if gospel faithfulness became a central request?

Prayer keeps the armored life dependent, alert, and connected to the needs of others.

CHAPTER 10 | EPHESIANS 6 EXPANDED STUDY

Case Study

Pray at All Times

The leadership team at a growing church meets to pray on the first Monday of each month. The requests are written on a whiteboard: attendance numbers, the building fund, the summer launch, the reach of a video series.

These are not unworthy. But over eleven months the board has never once included a request for holiness among the leaders, for courage in personal witness, for a suffering believer by name, or for anyone in the city who does not know Christ. One elder noticed and did not raise it, because the meetings are short and the list is already long.

Paul, writing from prison, asks the Ephesians to pray that he would speak boldly. He does not ask first for release. That request does not forbid praying about circumstances; it refuses to let circumstances be the whole of what prayer is for. Applied to this whiteboard, it would change roughly everything on it.

Read the situation twice before turning the page. Notice where the reasoning turns, not only where the conduct does.

Group Study and Prayer

Pray at All Times

Opening

Read Ephesians 6:18-20 aloud twice, using two translations if available. Listen first for what the passage reveals about God, then for the response it calls forth.

Discuss

1. Which sentence in this chapter did you most want to argue with?
2. Where have you seen this truth held well by someone you know?
3. What makes this hard to live out in our particular setting?
4. What does this ask of us together that none of us can do alone?
5. What is one thing we should stop doing as a group?

Pray together

Pray for peace without compromise and faith without presumption. Give time for silence, and let someone who rarely prays aloud go first if they wish.

My commitment

Pray for one personal need, one suffering believer, one unbelieving person, and one gospel worker. Include worship, confession, thanksgiving, and a request for faithful action.

Prayer

Father, teach me to pray with perseverance. Help me notice those who need encouragement. Give your people courage to speak of Jesus and grace to remain faithful in hardship. Amen.

Deeper Teaching 1

Wearing the Armor in Everyday Relationships

The battlefield includes ordinary obedience

The armor passage follows instruction about daily conduct and household relationships. That placement matters. Paul does not separate spiritual seriousness from the way believers speak, work, parent, or treat those under their authority. Ephesians 6 tells children to obey their parents in the Lord and calls fathers away from provoking their children toward anger. It also addresses enslaved people and masters within the ancient social order. We should name that historical reality accurately rather than treating slavery as identical to modern employment. The instruction to masters rejects threatening conduct and reminds them that their own Master shows no partiality. The passage must not become permission to coerce or mistreat others. For contemporary application, we can ask how Christ's lordship changes responsibility and the use of power. Parents should correct without humiliation. Leaders should reject intimidation. Workers should act with integrity. People under pressure should seek wise support rather than assuming faithful endurance requires silence about harm.

Pause and respond

Does your conduct at home agree with your public faith?

Deeper Teaching 2

Wearing the Armor in Everyday Relationships

Truth, righteousness, and peace at home

An everyday disagreement can reveal whether our beliefs are becoming practices. The belt of truth calls us to describe the problem honestly. The breastplate of righteousness calls us to refuse manipulation. The gospel of peace reminds us that reconciliation matters. Faith entrusts the outcome to God rather than using control as a substitute for trust. The helmet of salvation prevents a difficult moment from becoming the whole story of our identity. The Word guides our response. Prayer interrupts the assumption that we can repair relationships through technique alone. These connections are practical applications of the passage, not a formula guaranteeing that another person will change. We remain responsible for our own conduct while recognizing that reconciliation ordinarily requires honest participation from both sides.

Pause and respond

How do you use whatever influence or authority you hold?

CHAPTER 11 | EPHESIANS 6 EXPANDED STUDY

Deeper Teaching 3

Wearing the Armor in Everyday Relationships

We stand as a people

Paul closes Ephesians with Tychicus, a trusted messenger sent to encourage the believers. The letter's final movement is personal and communal. The church's life includes communication, comfort, peace, love, faith, and grace. That ending corrects an isolated picture of the Christian warrior. We pray for one another, bear burdens, and receive encouragement. Belonging to a faithful Christian community gives us people who can challenge our blind spots and help us keep going. Practice: Choose one relationship in which you can take a clear step of obedience. Offer an honest apology, refuse gossip, express gratitude, ask for counsel, or pray with someone. Make the step specific enough to complete this week.

Pause and respond

Who knows you well enough to encourage and correct you?

Key takeaway

God's armor becomes visible in the ordinary ways we love, speak, work, and serve.

Christian Commentary Lens

Wearing the Armor in Everyday Relationships

A historic voice

Matthew Henry reads Ephesians 6 as a call to faithful responsibility under the lordship of Christ. The commands confront tyranny and partiality rather than providing religious cover for coercion.

Read commentaries wisely

Christian commentators can clarify language, historical setting, theological connections, and pastoral application. They are valuable teachers, but they are not inspired Scripture. Compare their claims with the biblical text, notice where their traditions differ, and resist treating one interpreter as the final authority.

Questions for evaluation

1. Does this reading depend on the image, the wider letter, or both?
2. Would the point survive if the military metaphor were removed?
3. Which other Scripture would you set beside it?
4. How would you explain this to someone new to the Bible?

2. Is a real observation being joined to a false conclusion?
3. Whom does this idea make it easier to look down on?
4. Does it invite correction, or does it insulate itself from it?
5. What does it promise, and can Scripture actually guarantee that?

Spiritual faithfulness becomes visible in homes, workplaces, churches, and the responsible use of authority.

My discernment notes

CHAPTER 11 | EPHESIANS 6 EXPANDED STUDY

Case Study

Wearing the Armor in Everyday Relationships

Pastor Reed is warm in the pulpit and widely liked. Staff turnover at his church is high and nobody outside the staff knows why.

In private he manages by pressure. He reminds a worship leader that her position depends on his recommendation. He tells an administrator that raising a concern with the board would show a lack of loyalty. When someone resigns he speaks generously about them publicly, which makes the departing person's account sound bitter by comparison. Two people have left ministry altogether.

Ephesians 6:9 tells masters to stop threatening, and grounds that command in a Master who shows no partiality. Reed's public warmth is not the opposite of his private conduct; it is what makes the private conduct effective, because it ensures no one will be believed. This is not a personality issue to be managed. Where authority is being used to silence people, appropriate intervention — the board, and where conduct is unlawful, the proper authorities — is part of what faithfulness requires, not a failure of grace.

Read the situation twice before turning the page. Notice where the reasoning turns, not only where the conduct does.

CHAPTER 12 | EPHESIANS 6 EXPANDED STUDY

Deeper Teaching 1

Standing Until the End

Victory is rooted in Jesus

Christian hope begins with what Jesus has done. Colossians 2 connects the forgiveness of sins with Christ's triumph over hostile powers. The cross, which appeared to display his defeat, belongs to the announcement of his victory. That victory does not mean believers experience no present conflict. Jesus told his disciples that they would face trouble while calling them to courage because he had overcome the world. The New Testament holds together accomplished redemption, present endurance, and future restoration. We therefore measure faithfulness by allegiance to Christ, not by uninterrupted ease. A Christian who continues to trust, repent, love, and pray through hardship has not missed the meaning of victory. Such perseverance is one of the places where the sustaining grace of God becomes visible.

Pause and respond

Where have you measured faithfulness by ease?

CHAPTER 12 | EPHESIANS 6 EXPANDED STUDY

Deeper Teaching 2

Standing Until the End

Return when you fall

Some readers will finish this study conscious of how often they have failed. You may remember words you cannot unsay or habits you should have confronted earlier. Let that awareness lead you to repentance rather than concealment. The armor passage is addressed to people who need God's strength. It offers no encouragement to pride. If you have sinned, confess it. Where possible, repair what you have harmed. Receive the help of mature believers. Return to the ordinary practices of Scripture, prayer, fellowship, and obedience. The Christian life is not sustained by pretending that the past did not happen. It is sustained by the Savior whose mercy calls us into a different future. Grace can restore us to faithfulness while we continue to face the consequences of earlier choices.

Pause and respond

What are you concealing that repentance would bring into the open?

CHAPTER 12 | EPHESIANS 6 EXPANDED STUDY

Deeper Teaching 3

Standing Until the End

An in-depth conclusion: a life shaped by the gospel

The armor begins and ends with God's provision. Truth frees us from deception because God has spoken. Righteousness forms our conduct because grace has made us new. Peace steadies and sends us because Christ has reconciled us to the Father. Faith receives what God promises. Salvation gives us a future that suffering cannot erase. The Word directs us, and prayer keeps us dependent. These gifts belong together because they belong to life in Christ. They are not independent spiritual techniques. The Christian who reads Scripture while refusing repentance has separated what God joins. The person who prays for victory while nourishing hatred has forgotten that people are not the ultimate enemy. The believer who pursues holiness while doubting that grace can receive a penitent sinner needs to hear the gospel again. To stand, then, is to remain faithful to Jesus with the resources Jesus supplies. We stand in private when no one applauds. We stand in community when another person needs our prayers. We stand in witness when truth is costly. We stand in repentance when pride would rather hide. Revelation 21 points beyond the struggle toward God's dwelling with his people, the end of death, and the removal of sorrow. The armor is for the present conflict; the promised future is life in God's renewed creation. Keep that destination before you. The Lord who calls his people to stand is worthy of their trust.

Pause and respond

What practice will you continue after this study ends?

Key takeaway

Stand firm in Christ today, trusting the Savior who has overcome and will complete his work.

CHAPTER 12 | EPHESIANS 6 EXPANDED STUDY

Case Study

Standing Until the End

Miriam has prayed for her son for nineteen years. He is not hostile to faith; he simply has no interest, and the conversations they used to have stopped a long time ago.

She still prays, but she is tired of it, and the tiredness has become its own accusation. At a women's study last month someone said that God answers persistent prayer, and Miriam went home and cried, because she has been persistent for nineteen years and is now unsure whether she is being told that the delay is her fault.

Nothing in Ephesians 6 promises Miriam the outcome she wants on a schedule. What it does is redefine what standing means. She has continued to trust, to repent, to love her son, and to pray through two decades without visible result. That is not a failed version of faithfulness; in this passage it is the thing itself. Her weariness needs company and lament, not a diagnosis.

Read the situation twice before turning the page. Notice where the reasoning turns, not only where the conduct does.

APPENDIX B | LEADER GUIDE

Leading the Study

A flexible twelve-session rhythm

- Welcome and prayer — 10 minutes
- Read the main passage — 10 minutes
- Discuss the teaching and Scripture map — 25 minutes
- Work through the case study — 15 minutes
- Name one application — 10 minutes
- Pray in response — 15 minutes

Leader posture

Lead as a fellow disciple under Scripture. Encourage participation without pressuring disclosure. Correct confidently when the gospel is distorted, but distinguish central Christian truth from secondary interpretive differences. Do not present yourself as able to diagnose unseen causes behind another person's suffering.

Using the case studies

The case studies are the heart of each session. Read the situation aloud, then let the group work the questions before you offer a reading of your own. Resist the urge to resolve the case quickly; the value is in the group noticing where a real person's reasoning turned, not in reaching the answer the leader already has.

When needs exceed the group

Serious mental-health concerns, abuse, threats, criminal conduct, and medical emergencies require appropriate professional or legal help. Prayer and pastoral care can accompany such help; they must not be used to delay safety or responsible action.

Group Covenant

- We will center our study on Jesus Christ and read Scripture in context.
- We will listen carefully and speak truth with love.
- We will protect appropriate confidentiality while never promising secrecy about danger or abuse.
- We will avoid sensational claims and admit what Scripture does not tell us.
- We will make room for questions, grief, repentance, and growth.
- We will pray for one another and honor appropriate boundaries.

APPENDIX C | SOURCES

Commentary Sources and Further Study

The main exposition and practical examples in this book are original study material. Labeled commentary insights are brief paraphrases of the sources below. They do not imply that the commentators endorse every application in this book. Scripture remains the primary authority for the study.

Matthew Henry

Concise Commentary on the Whole Bible, Ephesians 6, verses 10–18. Used in Chapters 3 and 9 for the completeness of God’s provision and the faithful use of Scripture.

John Calvin

Commentary on Galatians and Ephesians, on Ephesians 6:10–13, translated by William Pringle. Used in Chapter 2 for dependence on God’s power and preparation in the face of spiritual opposition.

John Calvin

Commentary on Galatians and Ephesians, on Ephesians 6:14–20. Used in Chapters 4, 5, 7, 8, and 10 for sincerity, practical righteousness, faith and the Word, salvation’s hope, and persevering prayer.

David Guzik

Enduring Word Bible Commentary, Ephesians 6, section B. Used in Chapters 1 and 6 for strength in the Lord and gospel readiness.

Historical commentaries reflect their authors’ theological traditions. Where an interpretation is contested, this book identifies the distinction instead of presenting it as universal agreement.

APPENDIX C | FURTHER STUDY

Reading Ephesians as a Whole

Read Ephesians straight through in one sitting, paying particular attention to how chapters 1–3 ground the commands of chapters 4–6. Trace the themes of power, peace, truth, the Spirit, prayer, and the church. Then revisit the armor passage and note how much of its vocabulary has already appeared in the letter.

If you want a modern commentary alongside these

The three sources above are historic and freely available, and they share a broadly Reformed outlook. Readers who want a wider range should consult a modern academic commentary on Ephesians as well, and compare where the readings differ.
